MANY PRIZES FOR THE POULTRY SHOW

Six Hundred Dollars in Cash for Prizes for Poultry. One Hundred for Apples. Many Other Prizes to be Offered.

Indications at this early date point to a large number of entries at the first annual poultry and apple show to be held in Biglerville in January and the management is busy perfecting plans for the entries and prizes to be offered. The premiums will prove very attractive to exhibitors.

In the poultry department $600 in cash, many special premiums and several silver cups will be offered. C. C. Cormman, of Carlisle, assisted by W. Theo. Wittman, of Allentown, will be the judges for the poultry exhibit. They are well known authorities along this line. The poultry will be exhibited in the Betterman building, a well lighted and steam heated structure large enough to exhibit 1,000 head of birds.

The fact that this is the initial poultry show for this county will contribute largely in securing entries for the event and the management now expects to have every available inch of space utilized by fanciers. Adam's County is rapidly coming to the front as the poultry business and chickens from this county are figuring prominently in awards at various county fairs this fall. Nearby counties are making a bid for the show which will be held at Biglerville from January 1st to 4th and the committee is trying to get a dozen premiums to be large

A large room in the Betterman building will be devoted to the display of apples on plates containing five apples of one variety. No fruit will be allowed to exhibit more than two plates of any one variety. A judge of national reputation will be selected to judge the apples and $100 will be given in cash premiums. Special premiums of ten York Imperial apple trees will be offered for the best individual display of ten apples, 50 Delicious trees for the best Stayman exhibit, and 25 Smoke House trees for the best Winesap apples. It is expected to offer apple trees as special premiums for each of the leading varieties grown in this county. A premium catalogue will be issued about December 1st.

Announcement is made that the purchase of several tracts of land at the southwestern edge of town by William B. Kurtz, of Philadelphia, is to be followed by converting the land into a public playground for the children of Gettysburg, the entire plans to be completely equipped and stand as a memorial to Mr. Kurtz's father, William Wesley Kurtz, a native of Gettysburg.

The land acquired ties immediately east of the Winebrenner Lane and has been the property of Mrs. Amanda Homan and Josiah Spangler. Sixteen acres lines already been purchased at an expenditure of over $600, and it is likely that still more land will be bought.

Though the plan of Mr. Kurtz is not yet fully outlined it is understood that the plans will be in charge of a superintendent who will live in a cottage to be erected on the grounds. A base ball diamond, football gridiron and tennis courts will be constructed. It is said, also, that the playground will with gymnastic apparatus and shower baths as also several fountains. The Winebrenner Run will furnish the water for the playground park and a small lake with a possible swimming pool is also in contemplation.

The complete plans will be taken up later and in the meantime the Times with all others interested in the welfare of Gettysburg, will express the prospect of this magnificent gift which will mean so much to the children and citizens of the town.

William Wesley Kurtz to whose memory the playground park is to be constructed was born in Gettysburg and after spending some years here clerking in the dry goods store in Philadelphia where he was very successful. He died in 1899 at the age of 53 years, his son equally fortunate as a banker in Philadelphia and was largely prompted, in deciding upon the gift, by memories of happy days spent here during his boyhood years with other members of the family and many friends in the town.

Reaching in the opening so as to be able to turn the knob back and raise the window from the inside was the burglar's way. FALSE RUMOR

A rumor gained wide circulation in Gettysburg Thurs. told of the murder in Philadelphia of Bernard Steck, son of Mrs. Steck, of South Washington street. WILL LIKELY ERECT CHAPEL

College Church Congregation Favors Plan to Erect Chapel in Rear of Present Church. Will Vote for Pester.

The congregation of the College Lutheran church at their annual meeting on Wednesday evening ratified the action of the church council in recommending the erection of a chapel in the rear of the building School, the Christian Endeavor and other organizations. The council was instructed to proceed further in securing plans and estimates to be presented to the congregation at a future meeting.

The present room in the basement of the church is dark and damp, difficult to ventilate properly and impossible to heat at the same time that the main auditorium is getting heat from the various furnaces in the building. The seeling is low, the walls need new decorations and the room is generally unlovable.

Recently the Sunday School asked the church council to take action favoring the erection of a chapel and on Wednesday evening they made the desired recommendation. The plan is to have the chapel erected at the rear of the present building with the new structure extending from the east wall of the church to the west line of the lot on which it stands. The lawn at the west side of the present church will be improved with a concrete walk and the place otherwise beautified. It is expected that the cost of the chapel will be about $6000. The present heating system in the church will be set out and a new hot water plant to heat church and chapel would cost about $1,000 additional.

The congregation of College Church also considered the matter of securing a pastor and decided to hold another meeting on October 20 at which time a vote will be taken.

The annual election of officers was held Wednesday evening and resulted in the election of Rev. C F. Sanders and Dr H C. Altemus, as elders; and J. Ellis Hartman and Harvey A. B. Wenk, deacons.

The last new morning church service was fixed at 10.45. Sunday School during the Fall and Winter will begin promptly at 9.45.

PENN DEFEAT NOT SO BAD

Gettysburg's Possibilities Shown in Game Between University and Locals on Saturday. Good Material yet developed.

Going down to defeat before the University of Pennsylvania team by a 10 to 0 score in Franklin Field Saturday by the overwhelming score of 39 to 0, the Gettysburg football team demonstrated to spectators what has been known by the coaches since the beginning of the season,—that the squad has much undeveloped green material which, with hard work and careful coaching, will go to a good second of itself later in the year.

At Philadelphia Saturday they met a team composed of men of vastly more fast ball experience, of much greater weight and thoroughly versed in all departments of the game. This aggregation completely swept the Gettysburg boys off their feet in the first two periods and when the latter half ended four touch downs had been scored.

With the same line-up on both sides the second half opened and before it had proceeded many minutes the Gettysburg boys showed the stuff of which they were made, preventing Penn from scoring throughout the entire third period and holding them through the latter part of the fourth quarter of the game. Penn did not put in substitutes until the last few minutes of play when Gettysburg was on the same end Penn's strongest line-up was in the game practically the entire time.

How was Gettysburg' star tackler, stopping Penn's ball-luging backs time time after time when they had sloded the heiance of the Gettysburg team. The university's forwardwas almost invulnerable and they went with ease through Gettysburg's ends and through the line.

Gettysburg was able to do little in the way of ball and was held down to first down throughout the entire game.

The entire squad will now be put through rigorous training for practice for the balance of the season. Saturday's game demonstrated the present weakness of the local college eleven but equally well did it demonstrate the possibilities for the season of 1913 and a vast improvement is expected in the game next Saturday with Lehanon Valley on Nixon Field.

WORKING OUT ECLIPSE

The Harrisburg Star Independent says: John L. Kerkpatrick, stenographer to Secretary McAfee at the State Department, is somewhat of a mathematician although pronounced like a Whig at college he conceived the idea of working out the next eclipse of the moon, which it was known would follow some time, and he set to work with mud and slate. He discovered that he was able to announce the event to the fraction of a minute, and the subsequent eclipse bore him out in his calculations. It takes some figuring to work out an eclipse to say nothing of time, application and worry over mistakes, but Kirkpatrick has proved he borne out by subsequent events."

The Carefel Jailer.

Prince Warden—He's just hoon found out that you didn't commit murder and you've been in for all those years, and so the governor has pardoned you.

Innocent Man—Governor pardoned, am I?

Prince Warden—Yes, but don't get vet. I'll have to telegraph for further instructions.

Innocent Man—What about.

Prince Warden—Governor to me that yesterday you hadn't any business here, you couldn't pay the state for your board.—New York Weekly.

A SOCIAL WARNING.

Stranger (to Bad Man's Land)—I think that I shall make a few informal calls.

Bad Bill—Stranger, don't do it. Whether you're calls', ratain' or layin' down, here's my advice an' observe all the formalities of the game.

How to Be Graceful.

If you want to be graceful, don't walk, but glide, and don't step down but up in the air. Don't shuffle. A little thoughtfulness and practice in high stepping soon breaks you of this ugly habit. Don't walk as if you had a waist under the impression that you have a corset over it. It throws the stomach forward and is almost as bad as the old-fashioned straight-front. Finally, don't allow yourself to walk "pigeon-toed"—that is, with the toes turned in or out. Keep the toes low to be graceful in movements while you do.

Smart Cast and Exit.

Even in plain coats and skirts there is a chance for novelty at the time of trimming, or the introduction of another fabric of contrasting color to obtain the requisite variations. One very charming coat and skirt was composed of the fashionable loose shade of coral linen, with ravers of black and white pattern, which form a pointed cape collar at the back. A narrow strip of the pattern outlines the basque of the coat and appears as a panel let in to the skirt from the under-petticoat

FOUND A SACRED LAKE

GOLDEN ORNAMENTS DISCOVERED BY DR. DAVID ENDICOTT.

Expedition Finds Crown Into the Heart of Mountains of Columbia, in These Religious Rites, Before Spanish Conquest.

Scores of antiquarians and others interested in the races that inhabited the American continent before the coming of the Spaniards visited the assembly room at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel to see the relics recently taken from the sacred lake of Guatavita, near Bogota, South America, and to hear New York by Mr. Hartley Knowles the explorer who found them. Dr. Endicott was one.

The story of the finding of the relics, which consist of gold ornaments, emeralds and pottery, reads like a romance. Ever since the Spaniards conquered the Indian race that inhabited the high plateau of Cundinamarca sifter's have been made to recover the golden relics in the sacred lake by the Indians as a religious rite. Spaniards have failed in this, but draining the lake was too difficult for them. Another determined attempt was made in 1823 by Capt. Charles Stuart Cochrane, an Englishman, but he failed also. In 1900 a British corporation was formed, and it tunneled the mountain that formed the lake. It has now begun to mine the lake bottom for the relics.

Lake Guatavita is almost in the center of the Green Mountains, and it was the home of the Chibeh kingdom, of which Bogota was the capital. It is a picturesque and who had a civilized form of government. One of the kings of the Chibehs is said to have had more than a million inhabitants.

The Chibehs paid homage to two gods. The sun was the beneficent deity, and the goddess of the earth or evil spirit they believed was a huge serpent that lived in the mountains of lake Guatavita and which when angered caused earthquakes. Some of the other evils which sometimes affect an agricultural population. Therefore, it is said to have been served they pretended to worship him and offered gifts to propitiate the evil genius.

Four temples to the serpent stood on the bank of the lake, which was only a mile and a half long and half a mile wide. Once a year a great feast was given in honor of the serpent. The ceremony consisted of casting gold ornaments and other precious objects into the lake, after which it was said the god could get them. The exact order of the ceremony is described in rude ropes in the form of a cross, from the four points of which the ropes propelled toward the center of the lake. Rafts were then constructed of reeds and the observing of the multitude. On the raft was placed the cacique, who, body was covered with gold dust. When the precious objects were thrown into the lake the cacique self jumped into the lake and washed off the gold dust.

The first Spaniards to visit the country witnessed one of these ceremonies the practice gave rise to the Spanish legend of El Dorado.

Shipper's Good-By.

The captain of the ship the "crack" American Hears used to say that his wife was always ready to accompany him, he spoke to on leaving port and the first on returning. It was a pleasant habit on the part the understood by most of those who heard him make the statement, this was permitted, true, says the Liverpool Mercury. He knew was on the Mersey that his wife would be never passed it without "speaking" by the means of the semaphore. For the occasions he had a special code, which none was known to the members of the practice, could understand. One has under his control a number of flags on which he could raise three terrific wails as a signal to his wife. At night they were sufficiently loud to be heard at first sleep. Another captain, who retired and took shore, had a terrible whistle for goodby when he was dropping down the Mersey and anything for "all well" as he was coming up. The Liverpool pilots had a code of their own passing a point to which his thoughts could be directed by the use of each trackless deep. Both of these signals were well understood, not only by his wife and children, but by many of his friends.

Must Master the Iron Clubs

The true secret of successful golf is accuracy with the irons. It is not enough be a really first-class player unless he is also a master of all the various shapes of iron clubs. Deadly accurate approaches to the green and the ability to feats in wooden club play, and, in consequence, it is the player who shows any other with which a player should practice. I am not going to say that it is necessary for a player to be a complete master of every class of iron shot and to have intimate knowledge of the correct way of playing them, but I will say that it is considered necessary for a player who is anxious to attain a high standard of accuracy to have a good command of his iron clubs.—Harold H. Hilton, in the Outing Magazine.

A Chaser.

The fatuolitive Old Woman—Ward why did the train stop before we came to the station?

The Guard—Got run over a pig, mum.

The Inquisitive Old Woman—What, was it on the line?

The Guard—No—oh, no; we chased it.

BOOK REST FOR THE TABLE

Useful to Prop Up Newspaper and Make Its Reading Somewhat More Comfortable.

The propping up of a newspaper or book at breakfast time, with the hot water jug or some other article, is a very common habit but a rather unsatisfactory one, as it is a difficult matter to secure the book or paper in position, and often it slips down, or possibly, the article which is acting as support may be knocked, and this means an interruption which is not always agreeable, especially so when the time for reading is generally very limited.

For making the simple table book rest shown in the accompanying sketch, no knowledge of carpentry is necessary, as it merely consists of three pieces of wood fastened together with nails or screws and a loop of ribbon fastened across the front, under which the book or paper may be slipped and held in its place. About twelve inches in length and nine or ten inches in height, is a good size is which to carry it out, and this should be the measurement of the front piece of wood, but the sides may vary, of course, be cut to correspond.

When the woodwork has been constructed it is an easy matter to cover it with silk or some fancy piece of garment of material that may be handy, which should be stretched evenly across and fastened on at the back with tiny tacks or some strong adhesive.

FORECAST THE WINTER HAT

As the days get shorter, they get more and more sultry, in the absence of any clear sunshine, but the fall hat problem remains unsolved. It wurde a wiener ideal, writes a Paris correspondent. You really cannot courage to put your head out of doors in the most feverish watering place, with a straw hat pinned to your brow. The French milliner knows this, and even a Panama, and white felt, dark plush and such like other materials are worn in cool weather, and, indeed, but as the season advances, the hat grows more and more elaborate, and some of the riding trials at Deauvi this week were a round and close-fitting felt, in a kind of white panne, that was irregularly enough in outline to be a misnomer of tights upon it. This had for trimming the plumage of every bird in Paradise in the gorgeous natural coppery tint that we seldom see, but which is so lovely that it is surely enough to be suitable at the smartest functions, and will probably be seen at Ait-Le-Baine.

Fashion's Fancies

A tendency toward the old-fashioned square cut, low necked gown is noticeable in the models for fall wear.

For the seaside the retire jacket is fashionable and serviceable. It comes in reefers with white collar and cuffs and in Norfolk style.

With white costumes, white boots or white pumps are worn, and also with the novelty pumps in combination of black and white are good.

Dainty scarfs are an absolute necessity. They are of changeable chiffon cloth in rainbow tones, and are two and a half yards long and a yard wide.

HOW GEMS ARE IMITATED

Nature Copied With Remarkable Success by the Men Who Make Counterfeit Precious Stones.

The makers of imitation precious gems copy nature with remarkable success.

Zircons are composed of zirconia. Their luster is deceptive, a name having been discovered of correcting the color, thus giving them diamonds in all appearances, although their fabulous pecuniary proclaims itself understood.

Precious stones are frequently found in such thoroughnesses that, it said, the stone may be broken without disclosure of the process—that is, by the uninitiated.

The village of Oberstein, in Germany, devotes itself to the making of imitation gems, the chief of which are chalcedony and other stones. The stone selected for imitation and staining may be enriched in color by immersion in the dye-pot. The stones are placed in vessels containing the coloring matter and are then subjected to great heat for periods varying from a few hours to a week or more. In the case of chalcedony, the stone shows bands of different degrees of intensity, a result of the bands like the color and others do not. The stone then receives a further staining in pots containing other dyes.

Fluorspar is capable of great beauty when it is properly selected by a tasting process and cruciblolite is given a less artificial but no less effective method.

Take emerald and the cat's-eye are of all stones the most easily imitated. One finds at Oberstein, in the very heart the secret of converting crudolites into cat's-eye. Cat's-eye may be obtained at the mines and at the borehlands and even of fibrous gypsum.—Harper's Weekly.

On a Leading Strike.

A man in town who proved to be of good family and owns a barrioer sa his case in Hereditary, in Paris the other morning for being found within the walls of the fortress. "Why don't you work?" he was asked by the magistrate. "I do not like to work," was the ingenuous reply. The prisoner went on to say that although he was in debt to his landlord, his social obligations and the necessity of keeping up good credit made increase to him twenty years ago. He left Narbonne, his family, his friends and respectability to tramp the roads of France, and never had a breche, he says, as he could not breathe in the recognized style. After some years he got tired of tramping and enlisted in the Foreign Legion under the name of Dufresne. He left the corps for ten years, and then came back to Paris, where he soon reads again, begrige as he went. The magistrate decided that he had been a thing vagabond food and lodging in a home, and he confessed, and was therefore sent to prison.

Found Use for Sawdust.

In the consideration of a cheaper method of preserving timber than is St. Paul (Minn.) sew and box mill, the manufacturers have had the subject of the disposition of the sawdust accumulated about the machinery. Since the time when this was made use of under the boilers, and thus it saved the expense of fuel, the cost has increased awar, but the problem was eventually solved by the practice of a cooage house where the sawdust was placed in the hayloby and then disposed of during the winter, when it furnished a blotter which could be secured in the summer. In winter the sawdust is largely demand for bedding in stables. The change from steam to electricity proved to be a considerable factor in the standpoint after the matter of the disposal of the refuse was solved in this manner.

"Why, you was in church yesterday, dear," gurgled one.

"Yes, were you in church?" gurgled the other.

"In church? How?"

"The rector read four chapters from the Book of the Apostles. And my husband insisted on getting up and going out after every sect."

The Sofe was as follows:

Dear Judge—

"I am going away, as I told you I would if he came. He is coming Tuesday I got a letter from him, it was written at two-thirty, London, almost three months ago. I can't think why I haven't got it sooner, but suppose it was given to the wrong consul and forgotten. In it he said he was tired of going to war and was coming home to me. I had money, he said, and we could live over here if we shipped aboard a tide bound for Savannah, and then he could get a yacht to try for a berth on a Boston-bound vessel. So I am going away and that coming back. I could not stand the disgrace and I could not see him. You and Grace would be the only ones I'd see. Don't worry about me I can always earn a living like I used to before strength. Please don't worry. If he comes tell him I have gone you do not know where. That will be true, for you don't. I shall write you very happy. I do hope so. Oh, John, you don't know how I hate to do this! but I must. I could not stand the shame of something terrible to him if he came, and I knew. Just say I have been called away and may be back some time. Yours gratefully I may. Love to all. Good-by.

"Yours truly,
"KEZIAH COFFIN."

The captain stared at the note. Then he threw it to the floor and stamped on for the door. The minister sprang from his chair and barred the way.

"Nat," he cried. "Nat! Stop! Where are you going?"

Hammond turned.

"Out!" he growled. "Goin' I'm goin' to find her, first of all. Then I'm comin' back to wait for him."

"But you can't. You don't know. She'll never come. She's dead."

"Dead! Fiddlesticks! This swindlin' this bee hoo too much for you, I ought to be there. I'm sorry you and doctor here right off. I can't stay myself. I've got to find her."

"Listen! listen to me! Ansel Coffin is dead. I'm sure of it. I'm sure I knew all about it. That was what I wanted to see you about. Did Keziah tell you of the letter I had from a man who died of smallpox in this very building? It was Coffin's nephew."

"Eh? John, you don't mean—"

"I'm not sure. It's the truth. That sailor was Ansel Coffin. I watched with him and was with him at the last, before he died, he spoke Keziah's name. He was delirious most of the time, of Truman and of her, over and over again. I was sure who he was then, but I called on Mr. Stone and he confirmed it. That was what I wanted to see you about. Did Keziah tell you of the letter? Did she tell you who died of smallpox in this very building? Is she with you?"

"No, John, you—"

"Then she knows. She knows the truth. That sailor was Ansel Coffin. I watched with him and was with him at the last, before he died, he spoke Keziah's name. He was delirious most of the time, of Truman and of her, over and over again. I was sure who he was then, but I called on Mr. Stone and he confirmed it. That was what I wanted to see you about. Did Keziah tell you of the letter? Did she tell you who died of smallpox in this very building? Is she with you?"

"Stop! Stop! Stop! Let me get a word in edgewise. You're not talkin' sense, you're talkin' like a crazy man. Keziah with me? Of course she isn't. Why should she be? Didn't she tell you she was goin' to me?"

"Yes. True, down on the Cape. Ever been there? Why didn't you shoot a good place as that in it?"

"Hmm! Truman! Well, Captain Hammond, you're a fool, as well as a gentleman."

"Yes. Fact is, Mr. Stone, I want to ask you where I can find Mrs. Keziah Coffin. I've been to her house, you see, I'll have to go there. I know, and she's come to Boston lately. Only came yesterday, I'm afraid. Can you tell me where she is?"

"Why do you wish to see her?"

"Oh, for reasons, personal ones. Give it up, don't you?"

"No, no, captain, I can't tell you where she is. Mrs. Coffin is—"

Captain Nat was greatly disappointed.

"Held on there, just a minute," he begged. "This is very important to me, Mr. Stone. Mrs. Coffin was the dearest friend of my wife's and that most lovely woman who was also Cousin Jerry's—or as my wife and I always called him, Jedediah's—only relative. Mrs. Coffin was the dearest friend of my wife's and that most lovely woman who was also Cousin Jerry's—or as my wife and I always called him, Jedediah's—only relative. Now you get it for me, Abner? I write to her and can't find her. I've got to find her. You tell me where she is and help me find her."

Captain Nat's kindness was the one thing Mr. Stone forgot when he sold no one but Keziah Coffin. He disliked to be reminded of it. It was a long while ago and the captain was dead. However, being reminded, he had called upon a friend in the clothing line and had obtained for Keziah the place of sewing woman. He proceeded to become housekeeper at the Truman parsonage and so settled him. Thus he washed his hands of her.

But now he was compelled to sell them again. Keziah had approved of his offer, to be sure, but Hammond's demanded that he find her a position. "Domiciled" was the word he used. Certainly she had not domiciled. She seemed to feel that her duty was right and proper, and its acceding to it the least he could do.

"What a fine place you've got here, Abner!" she said, inspecting the offices and stores. "I declare it's finer than she one you had when you first went into into business. Remember? Why, I'm sure father could have lived to see it. He'd have realized that his bestowed

$20,000 MORE FOR COLLEGE

President Granville Reports that Much More Secured Since Commencement. Town People Subscribing Liberally.

Those who have been watching with much interest and satisfaction the campaign in behalf of Gettysburg College the large sum of $180,000 to make available the $50,000 promised by the General Education Board, representing John D. Rockefeller, will be glad to know that only $20,000 of the amount remains to be promised and the time for raising this does not expire until next June.

At commencement time the year Dr. Granville told of the progress of the big campaign and was able to tell at that time that only $90,000 yet remained to be collected. Since commencement the work has been prosecuted with such vigor and success, however, that $20,000 more has been raised.

As is generally known the $50,000 Rockefeller fund was promised on condition that the collateral debt of $50,000 be provided for and that $100,000 in addition be raised. These three items make a total of $230,000. Counting the Rockefeller gift as part of the subscriptions President Granville has now secured $180,000 since taking up his duties as president of the college.

While this memorial campaign has been so vigorously pushed outside of Gettysburg the town itself has come forward handsomely with generous subscriptions and up to present writing its citizens have promised $18,000 which it is confidently believed will be further increased until it reaches the $15,000 mark.

An unusual way of securing some of the funds for the endowment has been followed by Dr. Granville, and those who are working with him. Sunday Schools have been asked to pledge themselves for the annual support of stations and a number have come forward, promising to give annually for that period the $15 or $10. This is to run readily to seen, will soon provide quite a handsome sum, and will also has contributed materially to the success of the big campaign.

AVIATOR KILLED AT TRENTON FAIR

Charles Walsh Falls 2000 Feet in Aeroplane.

Breaking of Lower Plane While Gliding Downward Caused the Disaster. Souvenir Hunters Carry Off Biplane.

Trenton, N. J., Oct. 4.—Falling from a height of nearly 200 feet in a Curtiss biplane, Charles F. Walsh, of San Diego, Cal., was dashed to death in the sight of 1000 people at the Interstate fair here.

The breaking of the lower plane as Walsh was beginning a circular downward flight was the cause of the accident. Walsh was breathing faintly when the first person reached him, but died almost immediately afterward.

The flight of Walsh was undertaken in the face of a fairly brisk breeze, which swept over the big enclosure at the grounds. It was announced that the wind was strong for aerial work, but that Walsh would attempt a flight. His ascent was accomplished without accident, and after rising to a height of about 2000 feet began to volplane downward glide, which brought him directly over the field in front of the grand stand. Then he began the circular manoeuvre, the success of which was probably responsible for the collapse of the under plane.

Through glasses those who could be seen struggling in right the biplane, which tipped almost on its end, then partially righted itself and made a glide of perhaps 1000 feet before the final collapse at hath planes started it whirling toward the field.

From that moment Walsh was practically observed from view in the tangled folds of the biplane, which came down with terrific speed, landing in the middle of a large open field. His neck was distorted, his skin forced completely out of place and many bones were broken. His legs were pinned under the motor.

Hardly had his body been extricated when hundreds of spectators poured upon the biplane and literally tore it apart in their madness to obtain souvenirs. When the crowd had finished its work the machinery was all that was left.

Walsh was about twenty-four years old, and is survived by a widow and two children. He was a pupil of Lincoln Beachey and had been an aviator for about three years.

During the first three days of the Trenton fair Walsh had thrilled the spectators by his daring and amazing by her perfect control of his biplane.

CLEVER SWINDLE IS UNSUCCESSFUL

Newton A. Tawney, of Gettysburg, Taken to Panel a Mile East at Town where he Fails to Fall into Swindlers' Trap

Newton A. Tawney, of 60 East Middle street, was the point of attack on the part of two unsuccessful swindlers on Monday. The scene of the attempt to relieve the local citizen of some money took place along the Boulevard, and about a mile east of town and the game was unusual.

During the morning a stranger, described as of medium height, with florid face and red hair and about 35 years of age, appeared at Mr. Tawney's home and, failing to find him there drove to Centre Square where he found his man. The visitor asked Mr. Tawney whether he knew where the old Eckstein Deardorff farm was situated and, upon being answered in the affirmative, asked the Gettysburgian whether he would care to accompany him in a trip to that place as he had in view the purchase of the place. Mr. Tawney had nothing else to do and got into the buggy.

The farm is located about a mile and a half east of Gettysburg and after an superficial inspection of the place, the two men started on the return trip. They had gone but a short distance when they were accosted by a man walking along the road, who said he wanted to know the way to Bonnaughtown.

They engaged him in conversation and he volunteered the information that he was just returning from New York where he had been "fleeced" out of $2,000 in a card game. The man with Mr. Tawney showed interest and the pedestrian produced four playing cards three aces and a joker. He said that in New York he had gotten to betting that he could find the joker and, failing, had lost the big sum of money. He then picked up the cards and left the place.

As a bit of experiment the men in the buggy tried to pick out the joker and, succeeding, was handed $5 by the supposed unfortunate gambler. Mr. Tawney asked to try his hand at it, and, noticing that the corner on the lucky card was turned a trifle, had no trouble so picking it out. The man who owned the cards handed him a five dollar bill which Mr. Tawney said he did not want. It as he had got his money back he was not entitled to it. His "friend" in the buggy immediately whispered,

"You may as well take it. The fool will give his money to some one else and we might as well have it as they."

Mr. Tawney said nothing but just held the money in his hand. The man with him again turned up the joker and the man in the road then produced a roll of paper—having the appearance of real money—and said it contained $90,000. Mr. Tawney was given a similar roll who he again found the joker. At this stage of the game the cards of the cards suggested that the "winners" put up $60,000. The man in the buggy held a conference with Mr. Tawney who cleverly agreed upon a trip back to town to secure the funds. The stranger remonstrated, he said until their return and after putting up two five dollar bills and the two rolls of money in a tin box under the seat the driver started on his drive slowly toward Gettysburg. They had scarcely started when the owner of the cards disappeared in the bushes. Some minutes afterward Mr. Tawney saw him driving after them in a buggy which he had evidently secreted at the side of the road. He failed to find them any to town.

The man with Mr. Tawney drove right up to his home on Mid lle street, allowed him to get out without suggesting anything about raising the money and then continued on. The following buggy contained the other of the pair who had changed his clothing between the time he left the two to the road and the time he started after them.

As soon as this man had passed, Mr. Tawney who had stood at his front door, followed at a distance and noticed that both teams went in the same direction and he finally lost sight of them.

The supposition is that the parties hoped to get the local man to show some real money while they engaged in the race along the road outside of town and, failing to do this, gave up hope and suggested raising the $60 000 to get Mr. Tawney back to town.

Taking teams from two Gettysburg liveries the men who attempted the swindling game with Newton A. Tawney met town on Monday drove across the Maryland line where they left horses and buggies and took trains for Baltimore. On Tuesday Investigators and Hoffman and Fleming and Keefer arrived a special delivery letter telling that the former team was at Mar and the other at Chewsville. Officers thought their teams stolen and local officers had started a vigorous search for the men.

It has developed, since the story of the experience of Mr. Tawney became known that the men came here on Sat., by motoring and registered at Hotel Gettysburg as H. W. Matthews, of New York and H. C. Heal, of Pittsburgh. They evidently spent the time between their arrival and the beginning of operations in getting acquainted with people and countin case and it is believed, that explains the ease with which the one claimed to know Mr. Tawney when he saw him on the pavement at the Hollinshead News Stand.

In securing a team from Hollinsworth and Hoffman one of the men simply stated that he wished to drive alone the town but in a different way and proceed to present my suspicion at the Fleming and Keefer livery. The man who secured the horse and buggy there went up to Mr. Bair and said,

"Mr. Fleming is down the pike, I suppose."

"Yes," answered the liveryman.

"Well, I want a team to go down there and if I am not back by noon don't worry. I will see that the horse is fed by some one."

Mr. Bair naturally thought that the party was in the employ of the State Highway Department with which Mr. Fleming is connected, and wished to see him on some business in that connection and the team was immediately hooked up for his use.

The last seen of the horse in the stable and a fine rubber tire buggy with which it usually appears on the premises. At the Hollinsworth and Hoffman place the boy notes, which is recognized as one of the liveries in the stable, was given together with a good leather tire buggy with red running gear.

As soon as the news at Mr. Tawney's appeared the stable of missing teams became known on Monday afternoon the local officers got to work to trace them. It was found that the men drove to Mount Chambersburg street and the search naturally led west of town. The help in search of the missing men and teams was made Monday evening by Fleming's brother-in-law, with which the vicinity of McKnightstown and Hilltown was gone over and the houses and buggies answering the description.

So far as is known the sole effort to relieve local citizens of their money was in the case of Mr. Tawney and, failing in this, they left for their next scene of operations. The men were genteel in appearance and would not naturally be spotted as crooks.

In their conversation on the Boonsboville road Monday morning in conducting the game Mr. Tawney by Thaw they showed much knowledge of the facts in this vicinity and it is supposed that they made a habit of plying their trade at such places.

SLIGHT RAILROAD WRECK

A wreck occurred on the Western end of the west end of Hanover Saturday evening, smashing in the passenger end of a freight car and the damaging of automobile belonging for shipment from the Hopkins Motor Company. The car was one of a half two cars loaded with soda bottles stood on the siding opposite the Long Furniture Company's plant, while they made a shift from a coal switch. The car was being backed and going from Gettysburg, smashing the front of the box car and doing considerable damage to the fins bodies loaded on the two cars. The catcher on the engine was also broken and considerable other damage was done.

COULD NOT FIND BLACK

State Patrolman Gearhart and Mr. Fadyen went to Mount Alto when it was reported that a man was there who answered the description of Hiram Black, the thief who stole a horse and buggy from Lutz parsonage, in Fairview, of Waynesboro, and who, while serving his term in the Pennsylvania Reformatory, broke paint and is now being sought for by police.

The officers on the spot arrived at the summit where Black was said to be, they found that their quarry had disappeared in the direction unknown.

CHESTNUT HUNTERS FOUND NUTS SCARCE

Several hundred people from Baltimore, York, Hanover and other nearby cities spent Sunday on the mountains around Pen Mar gathering chestnuts, but owing to the frost that as yet not enough nuts could be found evidence to open the burrs, the crowds for the most part returned to their homes empty. The chestnut crop is unusually small this season and the burrs which are already open are found for the most part, a very poor quality of nuts.

ENDS HIS LIFE BY DROWNING

After landing his pockets with stones, Augustus Peters of Hamiltonban township, jumped into an eighteen foot pool of water at the public ore mines at Charmian on Monday and was drowned, his body being found about an hour afterward.

Mr. Peters had come to this county from Baltimore several years ago and secured employment at the copper mines in the western end of the county. He worked there for several time but was finally thrown out of employment when several operations at that place closed and he was told by Superintendent Brown to get work elsewhere. Mr. Peters, however, would not leave and had no means of supporting himself, consisting of his wife and five children, the young est of which is now eight weeks old.

Conditions became very serious and he was told that he could purchase supplies on credit at the company store but refused to do so and finally began talking of suicide.

On Monday morning about the o'clock he went to the office of the company and hung up his watch on a clothes hook and then walked to the pool. After he had be n seen about an hour Mr. Brown feared that there might be something wrong and went to look for him. After some search he found Mr. Peters' hat and pipe lying on the bank of a large opening in the earth where some one had been close to excavation with the intention to have it re ady for thirty feet in diameter and about eighteen feet down into standing water to the depth of eighteen feet.

The footprints were plainly visible where he approached the edge and went down the steps to the water's edge and then plunged in to his death. Mr. Brown summoned help when he discovered what had happened and with grappling hooks the body was recovered after some little difficulty His pockets were found to contain a large quantity of small pebbles and he had put stones in his trousers to make sure that he should go to the bottom of the pool.

Coroner Wagner, of Chambersburg, was notified of the occurrence and went to the scene of the tragedy on Monday afternoon, holding an inquest and giving a verdict of death by suicide.

Little is known of Mr. Peters or his family in the western end of the county except in the immediate vicinity of his home. He was a man about thirty five years of age and had resided near the copper mines for three or four years going to that section from Baltimore. It is said that he had been temporarily deranged mentally for a time by reason of his failure and that he had undergone treatment at a private sanitarium before he came to this county.

In addition to his wife and five children Coroner Wagner learned that he has a brother living near there Whether he has any other relatives living has not been learned.

MOTOR CYCLIST'S EXPERIENCE

This from Chambersburg Public Opinion: A motorcycle tourist in travelling between Gettysburg and Greencastle on Thursday ran over a little lady of tiny great bustle Uncle to control his machine in run through a tollgate presided over by a woman, but retained and tried to pay his toll, whereupon he was "shocked almost and thumped by the diseased mistress of the toll house. Uncle Sam's clothes have treated a man in law with less respect. The victim tossed all relief to the winds, left the toll and evidently used his best pedestrian in getting out of the neighborhood. The arrest of the motherly keeper of the toll, whose apparent before the squire with a ten dollar bill, which she tendered in payment of fine and cost, but the man was apologies and asked for discharge.

By listening closely one may recognize this as a different account of the affair than that reported in The Times some days since.

MRS. CHRISTIE MINTER

Mrs. Christie Minter died at her home in Philadelphia, Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Minter formerly resided in Gettysburg and is well known to many here. She is also survived by three children and one brother, Dr. A. G. Wolf, of West Fairview.

HARMONY IN FLOWERS

ARTISTIC ARRANGEMENT CALLS FOR CONSIDERABLE SKILL

Lines and Colors of Stems and Blossoms Form the Dominant Center of Interest in the Flower Pictures

Any display of cut flowers in a receptacle should make a pleasing picture in which the lines and colors of the stems and blossoms form the dominant center of interest. Success in the making of such a picture is very easy if one will be content with simplicity and naturalness, but it becomes increasingly difficult as one strives after complexity and artistic finish.

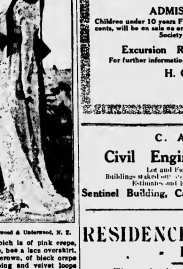
In all pictures certain harmonies are to be desired. In flower pictures, the chief of these are the harmonies of lines and color. The harmonies of lines are determined by the habit of growth of the plants used and the forms of the leaves and blossoms. The simplest way to secure beauty in this respect is to confine the display to one type of flower, and see that the lines of the stems and blossoms conform to the lines of the receptacle. Thus a few large roses on long, straight stems may be displayed to great advantage in a tall, cylindrical vase, while smaller roses on shorter, more fragile stems are much more effective when grown in low, broad receptacles.

Harmony of color in a flower arrangement requires simply that the flowers placed together shall not be of discordant tones, and that they shall combine attractively with the color of the receptacle. The latter is, indeed, of the greatest importance in the making of the flower pictures, for, if not simple in form and modest in color, it will spoil the beauty of any flowers with which it is used.

Pottery jars and vases useful as flower receptacles may be had to an almost indefinite variety of sizes and shapes and colors, and at a great range of prices. The more costly forms are not by any means always the most beautiful, and one may often get, for a few cents, jars of good form and color that serve admirably for holding flowers.

As a rule form, two chief types of flower receptacles are needed in any home where cut flowers are tastefully arranged—the tall and slender and the short and broad. The first are needed for the display of long-stemmed lilies, irises, gladioli and other slender long-stemmed flowers; the second to show to advantage roses, peonies, asters, sweet peas and other short-stemmed blossoms. Of course, various intermediate forms can be used to advantage for such flowers as daffodils and tulips of the narcissus, but, in general, the most useful jars belong to the tall or the broad type.—Suburban Life.

IN POMPADOUR PINK CREPE



Copyright, by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

The gown, which is of pink crepe, pompadour style, has a lace overskirt. The hat has a crown, of black crepe de chine, with ruching and velvet loops and strings.

The Directors Period.

The parasol with a pointed peak is the latest novelty. It is a dainty fancy silk with a very wide lace border. The handle is short and the top is small, and will be seen a great deal this autumn. This is a reminiscence of original idea of its manufacture being that of the directoire period, when it came to carry by followers of the simple life, who go hatless in the summer.

Another novelty seen across the ocean is the directoire period, hence its name. The handle resembles the canes carried by men, and the style evidently was originated to carry out this idea. When folded up this sunshade can be carried like an ordinary cane, while the ladies of the directoire period affected.

PLANK PITCHES REMARKABLE GAME

Gettysburg Veteran Goes Nineteen Innings in Fine Style only to Lose through Error of Collins. Praised by Papers.

Gettysburg's loan ball fans are having big discussions these days over Billy Plank's feat of pitching nineteen innings against Washington on Friday and then losing through an error by Collins 2 to 4. Philadelphia papers are loud in their praises of Eddie and a few clippings will be enjoyed.

The Inquirer says: "For nineteen innings they had struggled against the masterly pitching of Edward Gettysburg Plank, of sorrowful reproachful and unrecorded in unmating nothing but a series of knotted hopes and blasted ambitions. Ed. ward went the entire distance in faultless style, permitting but four scattered singles in the thirteen consecutive rounds following the second, the visitors batted but two men in each of the four final periods of play, the only lasting inflicting the second in which they could even clinster two hits in two consecutive innings."

The Record says: "Plank rounded out his best year in major league captivity by dominating the fray from the slab in the entire course of the contest. The visitors lunched for six hits in the first two innings and made their few four runs. Then Eddie began to toil and had it bet to his efforts to decide the final outcome they might be still playing, for he blanked the aliens with six hits for sixteen eventful innings and it was a horried close for Eddie Collins, even to complete a double play, that of Howard Ehmke, failure to rouble over the plate with the winning run with only one bit, a lucky bunt, helping to produce the home outpitcher both ground and fulsome and deserved to win, at any pitcher ever did."

The Press contributes this: "Ed ward S. Plank, the Athletics' veteran southpaw indelibly inscribed his name on the roll containing the few great heroes of baseball yesterday afternoon at Shibe Park.

"True Edward was defeated by Washington in a nineteen inning game, which was a swelling for the athletes and replete with thrills for the spectators during the three hours and fifty seven minutes consumed in its completion. But no general who found an army with the odds against him, ever went down in defeat with more plaudits from the spectators, be they friend or foe, than did Plank yesterday.

"Plank is just finishing his twelfth season with the Athletics. During those years he is the man who came to Connie Mack from Gettysburg College a raw recruit, lost been the central figure in many notable battles. Yet it reminded for his 'old age'—in a base ball sense—he had his left arm possessed of the strength and cunning necessary to pitch nineteen long and nerve-wracking innings."

MORGAN GAVE $150,000 FORT. R.

Financier Tells of Campaign Contributions in 1904.

$AVE $30,000 FOR TAFT

New York Financier Flatly Denies Roosevelt Made Telephone Demand For Money.

Washington, Oct. 4. — J. Pierpont Morgan appeared for the first time in many years on a witness stand, when the senate committee investigating campaign funds that has had given $150,000 to the Republican campaign of 1904, when Roosevelt was the nominee, and $30,000 to the Republican campaign of 1904, when President Taft was elected.

Mr. Morgan's questioning Mr. Morgan, who was a clerkful and without hesitation, denied emphatically the charge by Charles Edward Russell, of New York, that, with Senator Mark Hanna in Morgan's office, Roosevelt, than president, had telephoned to Morgan demanding a campaign contribution, declared he never had any conversation with Mr. Roosevelt whatever, and asserted that he knew of no contribution by Mr. Roosevelt during 1904 or 1908 to agree on suppo-ing Republican or Democratic presidential candidates.

The Russell statement, Mr. Morgan declared, "has been made out of whole cloth." The same title has been given to Mr. Russell's story by Senator Hanna.

Morgan confirmed the testimony of George R. Sheldon that he had contributed $150,000 to the presidential fund of 1904, and added that he had given $30,000 to the so-called "Harriman fund" of $240,000. He understood that this went to the state committee, and not to the national committee.

Morgan asserted that no contribution had ever been given by his firm or himself to influence legislation or interested in the 1904 campaign, except solely for the welfare of the country and the people at large. That was the only interest, he said, that had prompted him to make contributions to political parties.

Mr. Morgan declared the fortune of Mr. Morgan increases by $2 every minute the day. He said he had contributed $9720 worth of his time to the campaign of 1904, and that he considered just fifty-four minutes.

His examination was of especial interest since it was the political importance of much of his testimony in response to questions by Senator H. F. Morgan & Co., "I am the firm."

Mr. Morgan said he had no independence for what he believed to be the good of the country and the firm. He let of philosophy by saying that he sometimes wondered what was the good of it all, and therefore realized that what he personally might want was not necessarily for the best interest of the firm.

He left the witness stand to sit nearer the members of the committee to read from a memorandum which frequently joked in the laughter that came over the audience.

He said that the solicitors of his second contribution of $50,000 in this fund were not from the state committee. They "wanted more," he said. Neither was the contribution solicited by him. It was a "virtue" they lacked. They showed all they could get. The money had placed on limit on the amount of the gift, and he gave it.

Judge Charles H. Duell, of New York, who was assistant treasurer in the Roosevelt campaign when $150,000 was turned Morgan on the stand by direction, Chairman Clapp, of the committee. Duell testified that the Republican campaign of 1904 cost $1,900,000 and that the Republican committee in New York city gave $500,000 each to Democratic and Republican campaigns.

Mr. Duell said that he knew both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft. The $30,000 from John D. Archbold, but he thought that it was in 1904 and not in 1908, as he had given $100,000 that year. He also understood that the Harriman fund of $240,000 went to the state committee, although contributed through the national committee.

ARCHBOLD SAYS T. R. KNEW

Declares He Was Fully Aware of Purpose of Standard Contribution.

New York, Oct. 4.—John D. Archbold, of the Standard Oil company, appeared before the senate committee.

Archbold repeated his statement made before the congressional investigating committee, that the Standard Oil company had contributed about $100,000 to the Roosevelt campaign fund.

"I still stand by what I said," he said. "I have nothing to change in my question as to the giving of the money and absolutely no question as to our purpose in giving it. I am sure now that the money was given not the purpose of buying the election."

NINE DEAD IN TRAIN WRECK

Scores Hurt When Express Jumps the Track.

WOODEN PARLOR CARS BURN

Most of the Victims Were Burned to Death and Full List May Never Be Known.

Westport, Conn., Oct. 4. — Nine persons were killed, most of them beyond identification, and scores injured, many of them seriously, when four cars of the New York and Boston express left the tracks of the New Haven railroad a short distance west of here.

It will not be until those who know the injured and relatives were on the list are able to state all come forward to do so, perhaps, that the death list will be known. Between the automobile of interested parties and the painstaking establishments of the town the number of injured and the names of survivors who have been sent to their homes there is a great discrepancy.

The dead may equal twice similar missing may be many more, as the cars which were in the wreck are burned to ashes. They were wooden cars, and the hot coals of the engine were within the wreckage. It was during the Pinafore hour with which the express was filled. Many of the people from one end of the affected train in the other almost the moment the cars turned on, only the parlor cars were destroyed, and only those riding in them were in any danger. Most of the latter, with the exception of the engineer and fireman, escaped with bruises, accidents, and like incidents.

The first train reached Westport minutes before it reached Bridgeport, and Coroner Phillips, of Bridgeport, who has paid for any schedule he may have, was on the scene. Not with the idea of making up the time but to get ahead of the wreck. He borrowed a motor boat, and as soon as he reached the scene was sent clear of Bridgeport he was back with the first report of the disaster.

To the west of the station about 2 yards the old Boston post road passes under the railroad. It is a country road in the town, and that elevates the tracks about twenty-five feet above the street level.

The ill-fated train had shot past the station and was and the time the wreck ahead of it was the signal which warned the engineer of the danger. The speed he was going, so that there could be no stopping in the short distance. Apparently this was never thought of by the engineer and fireman, and as the little front wheels of the engine struck the first four there were a crashing of timbers and splintering of wheels and the rail and the engine were dragged down with it, crushed with a roar and a jolt that was heard and felt throughout the entire train.

The reader was hurled upon the 1 comotive, killing the engineer and fireman. The fine parlor cars were smashed upon the mass and literally took fire.
